History of Women's struggle in South Africa

With all of these developments, the level of collusion between the state and private monopoly capital, and between English and Afrikaans big business, has increased substantially on the economic and political fronts. In 1913, government officials in the Orange Free State declared that women living in the urban townships would be required to buy new entry permits each month. A draft Women's Charter was presented by Hilda Bernstein, and in complete identification with the national liberation movement as represented by the Congress Alliance, the Women's Charter called for the enfranchisement of men and women of all races; for equality of opportunity in employment; equal pay for equal work; equal rights in relation to property, marriage and children; and the removal of all laws and customs that denied women such equality.

The relevance of the ICU of Africa for modern day unions and liberation movements
