The effects of increasing niacin supplementation on growth performance, and pork quality of finishing pigs raised in seasonal heat stress

Pig Newsletter, Joint ARINI and Greenmount publication, June 2004 McCann, M. Meat prepared for the consumer should be tender and juicy. As temperature increases, the rate of metabolism increases, in turn causing an accelerated pH decline.

From 45 minutes to 24 h post-mortem, the highest pork hue value was recorded in A2, whereas the highest chromaticity was found in A0. Pre-slaughter handling Before transport feed and water were not withdrawn.

Technological, Sensorial and Nutritional Meat Quality Traits from Pig Fed with Conventional and Unconventional Diets

With this mechanism, there is no physical movement of fluid or air. Journal of Applied Microbiology, 101: 80 — 95. Effect of sire-type on production performance and carcass quality.

Correlations among stress parameters, meat and carcass quality parameters in pigs.

In addition, they tend to develop extremely large muscle fibers giant fibers and poor meat quality, which results in part from the inverse correlation between fiber number and fiber size. Information developed for the Pork Information Gateway, a project of the U. PSE meat originates from a rapid decline in pH while the carcass is still hot, leading to denaturation of myofibril proteins thus compromising their functional properties.
