The Tafas massacre was filmed in , Morocco, with Moroccan army troops substituting for the Turkish army; however, Lean could not film as much as he wanted because the soldiers were uncooperative and impatient.

The Making of: Lawrence of Arabia

A post-premiere memo 13 December 1962 noted that the film was 24,987. There are startling symmetries, like Lawrence checking his reflection in the golden dagger that goes with his immaculate new white Arab robes, and later seeing his blood-soaked face and clothes in the same dagger, following the massacre of the Turkish column. Lawrence Peter O'Toole, the heroic and troubled man who organized the Arab nations to fight the Turks in World War I and then, having reached a pinnacle of power in Mideast politics, retired to postwar military obscurity.

Some of the desert scenes for this movie were shot at Merthyr Mawr Sand Dunes, near Bridgend, South Wales, U. Both turned out to be the 202-minute version. Also, most fortunately, David Lean was eager to help put the film back together and to do some editing he'd been unable to finish before the film's premiere in 1962.
