Analyze Oratoria: Pro M. Caelio Oratio by Cicero

Quem si nobis, si suis, si rei publicae conservatis, addictum, deditum, obstrictum vobis ac liberis vestris habebitis omniumque huius nervorum ac laborum vos potissimum, iudices, fructus uberes diuturnosque capietis. Vidit hoc Balbus; celatam esse Clodiam dixit, atque ita Caelium ad illam attulisse, se ad ornatum ludorum aurum quaerere. So that if Caelius also was one of the great number of friends whom he had to boast of, there is more reason for his being vexed at having fallen into such a mistake, just as sometimes I myself repent also of having been deceived by the same person, than for his having any reason to fear the accusation of having been a friend of his.

PRO M. CAELIO ORATIO

Auro opus fuit; sumpsit a Clodia, sumpsit sine teste, habuit, quamdiu voluit. And those witnesses, O judges, I long to see, not only without the least apprehension, but with a sort of hope of great enjoyment.

Pro M. Caelio Oratio by Marcus Tullius Cicero

Refert enim magnopere id ipsum.

Pro M. Caelio book by Marcus Tullius Cicero

Austin's commentary is thorough and usually helpful in regards to grammar and historical context. Iam intellegitis, quantum iudicium sustineatis, quanta res sit commissa vobis. Tot igitur annos versatus in foro sine suspicione, sine infamia studuit Catilinae iterum petenti.

Pro Caelio

For those sort of reproaches are habitually heaped upon every one, whose person and appearance in youth is at all gentlemanly.

M. Tullius Cicero, For Marcus Caelius, chapter 15, section 35

For when was the time that men were not used to act in this manner? Nunc agam modice nec longius progrediar quam me mea fides et causa ipsa coget. Aut enim pudor tuus defendet nihil a M. Although his opponents took the opportunity of the trial to attack him on political grounds, the actual indictment against Caelius was prompted by social reasons.

Pro Caelio

Caeli maxime convenire, ut ad ea, quae accusatores deformandi huius causa, detrahendae spoliandaeque dignitatis gratia dixerunt, primum respondeam.

PRO M. CAELIO ORATIO

No corroborative proof is to be found in the circumstances; no ground for suspicion in any part of the case, no object for or result of the crime, can be imagined.
