	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Offers a more pluralistic view of political arrangements, where 'gender' becomes only one argument among others. Provides more complex views of social location and structures of oppression. Deconstructive and genealogical analyses provide an important strategy for demonstrating the limits of organizational discourse and the often gendered structure of those limits. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Critique of deconstructive and other poststructuralist analyses include the charges that they are elitist, inaccessible and full of jargon, making it difficult to utilize by most analysts, despite the deconstructing insights that is among the aims of these analyses.
Third World (postcolonial) feminism(WD)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Problematises the concept of 'gender' as constructed in the West and opens the possibility of other gendered configurations and more complex relations between women and men, in the context of multiple oppressions produced by global capitalism. Extends the critique of Western knowledge beyond deconstruction by articulating other possible conceptualizations and subjectivities. Produces positive images of Third World subjects' capable of agency and representation through localized in specific cultures and histories, and gendered and racialized intersections. Demonstrates the possibilities of political action and political pluralism within the neo-political realities of everyday (organizational) life. Illustrates additional approaches for engaging existing outside Western views of 'organization'. These approaches are often exemplified in new social movements and new manifestations of popular culture emerging in several (postcolonial) contexts. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> In some cases it is subject to the same critique of elitism and lack of accessibility leveled at poststructuralist approaches. Traditional Western 'politics of knowledge' might be played out in the context of 'Western feminism', i.e. rendering 'the other' invisible and available. In 'beyond gender' arguments need to be carefully positioned within critiques of neo-colonialism and global capitalism, otherwise they might lead to co-optation and trivialization of gendered issues and concerns. In organizational studies it seems to be particularly troublesome even for those who acknowledge their openness for postmodern feminism. There are concerns about accessing the existence of 'other knowledge' outside the bounds of 'Westernized' knowledge.
