Victims Confront Offenders, Face To Face : NPR

Older men and older women in the arms of criminal law: Offending patterns and sentencing outcomes. Poverty also had the largest effect on change in homicide rates from 1978-1981 to 1982-1985.

Bureau of Justice Statistics (BJS)

In Baltimore, both of these changes were associated with unexpected increases in relative violence levels. Nonviolent offense activity such as drug dealing and group-oriented drug consumption has especially high victimization potential. And this gave victims the chance - a real chance to take charge and to put issues in their own way.

Family homicide in Australia

Third, the list of variables considered has been expanded much beyond poverty, racial composition, and mobility to include such factors as inequality, density, housing structure, family disruption, region, and opportunities for crime.

Victims Confront Offenders, Face To Face : NPR

They'd heard about Howard Zehr and his work. In cases between victims and family offenders, there appears to be a trend involving offenders who are older than their victims. Smith and Visher 1980 conducted a meta-analysis of studies investigating the sex-crime relationship to examine the extent to which statistical associations varied according to study characteristics.

Because individual-level social characteristics have received disproportionate attention in the past, we tend to highlight the theoretical and policy implications of community-level factors. These empirical results suggest that communities characterized by sparse friendship networks, unsupervised teenage peer groups, and low organizational participation had disproportionately high rates of violence. The risk of rape among women in the remaining income categories is approximately equal.
