Technical report: Central auditory processing disorders - Working group on auditory processing disorders. Ohio Journal of Speech and Hearing, 2, 9-20. Electrophysiologic testing is further discussed in ASHA's technical paper as a means to obtain data from a child apart from the possible confounding variables of attention and language.

(C)APD Testing and Interpreting 101: Recommendations for Audiologists Kris Erickson Central Auditory Processing Disorder (CAPD) 896

Nearly a decade later, ASHA updated that statement with a working group document that contains recommendations to guide audiologists in assessing children for C APD. The DSTP is the only test of its kind to differentiate among the various levels of auditory and language processing and identifies areas for referral or further evaluation. Such an input generation process does not use any information from past inputs and essentially creates new inputs at random from a prohibitively large input space.
