This is a fair provision in which dependant people are adequately provided for, but on the other hand, the major issue with this legislation, in that it is a vigorous jurisdiction with widening classes of applicants and greater numbers of claims because the courts have more discretion which although can be seen as a fairer approach in judging each case on its own merits and in differing from intestacy, the presumed intention of the deceased is again being challenged and people can claim on the estate which may be contrary to this intention. As the Plaintiff was the daughter of the Deceased, she fell squarely within the scope of eligible people permitted to make a family maintenance claim under the Act.
