US proposal for defining gender has no basis in science

Behavior can have an impact on genetic makeup, even as early as the prenatal period. In his earlier paper, Savulescu 2001 notes that in a sexist society, we have to address the unfair treatment of women, but it doesn't make sense to do that through regulation of reproductive decision-making. If so, societal pressures on parental choices will have effects similar to policies enforced by a state—homogeneity of traits selected across the population.
