Informed Consent and Shared Decision Making in Obstetrics and Gynecology

A Critical History of Maternity Care. Shared decision making is a patient-centered, individualized approach to the informed consent process that involves discussion of the benefits and risks of available treatment options in the context of a patient's values and priorities. The legal standard for adequacy of the amount of clinical information or content given to the patient during an informed consent process may vary from state to state; obstetrician—gynecologists should be familiar with their state and institutional requirements for informed consent.

Informed Consent and Shared Decision Making in Obstetrics and Gynecology

Even in the context of conscientious refusal, physicians must provide the patient with accurate and unbiased information about the patient's medical options and make appropriate referrals. Normal confinement: home or hospital? Whenever feasible, it is particularly important to initiate anticipatory conversations about delivery possibilities during prenatal care and to continue these conversations early in admission. A Guide to Effective Care in Pregnancy and Childbirth.
