Vipers Tangle by Mauriac, Francois

Analysing the past and seeing it from a new angle, gradually enables him to let go of the bitterness behind his greed for money, if not to find peace of mind and some kind of natural spirituality that juxtaposes the only nominal Catholicism of his proud bourgeois family. The Viper's Tangle, however, reveals a dying patriarch's attempt to come to terms with alienation from his family and his consuming personal greed, issues that are more universal in scope. Moreover, he reveals that except for the short period of his engagement and early marriage, he felt unloved by his surroundings all his life, even worse, he considered himself unlovable for lack of natural charms.

He also writes about what is happening at present since he is old and his kids are very aware of his days being pretty much counted for. Here's a short overview of my feelings during the reading of this book, but first, a short explanation on what it's about.
