Caring for the Caregiver

However, few studies have examined the cost effectiveness of an intervention. Female caregivers have been found to experience more psychological distress than males in a meta-analysis , in an early literature review , and in a recent systematic review.

Caring and Coping Caregiver Workshops

Only a few studies have involved African Americans ; , Latino ; , and Asian ; caregivers. These findings are consistent with literature reviews showing that racial and ethnic minority caregivers experienced higher levels of subjective well-being and perceived uplifts than white, non-Hispanic caregivers. However, the evidence is limited and some of the studies that have been conducted have involved small samples or lack of a comparison group and most of this work does not focus on older adults.

AARP Resources for Caregivers and their Families

During cancer treatment, for example, caregivers are called on for numerous health and medical care activities at home, including symptom and side effect management, nutrition, hands-on procedures e. Thus, severe family conflict remains a hidden social effect of caregiving, recognized in clinical practice, but unexplored to date in research.

Dementia Care Education Resources

Initial studies of respite programs found inconclusive results.

Caring and Coping Caregiver Workshops

Studies, which evaluate interventions directed at the older adult care recipient e. Casey Foundation 2017 Offers a four-part training on a trauma-informed curriculum for foster parents, including a foster parent resource guide and a guide to help children manager their emotions.

Caring for the Caregivers: The Next Generation (Part 1)

Thus, an outcome attributed to caregiving such as depression may be a reflection of underlying vulnerabilities shared by both partners. These changes may be so subtle as to be nearly imperceptible at first. The review included 32 interventions; 22 interventions were evaluated in RCTs.
