STARS ACTUALLY FELL ON ALABAMA However, few people realize that the words probably came from an actual event on Nov. But the fried chicken made up for it.

Cover versions of Stars Fell on Alabama written by Frank Perkins, Mitchell Parish

Madison may toss off a lame joke about needing a passport to go to Alabama, or appreciate that their rental car is a monster truck, but her appeal is that she can read Bryce well enough to see the real him—even when he is hiding from himself. Two supporting characters of color are included in mostly White cast; both are portrayed positively.
