The weakest points, in the opinion of teachers and administrators, appear to lie in the accommodation of transfer students and the difficulty of students' recovering from absences.

Document Type: CONFERENCE PAPER 150 ; EVALUATIVE REPORT 142 This paper outlines, explains, and illustrates the core block model of scheduling, which allows students to spend more time with fewer teachers and encourages greater teacher interaction and ownership in the lives of their students. Analysis did identify differences that may or may not have been related to scheduling. The Dover Renew 2000 block schedule divides the school year into trimesters; each term has two 120-minute periods and a shorter interest block.

Document Type: CONFERENCE PAPER 150 ; RESEARCH REPORT 143 ; TEST, QUESTIONNAIRE 160 Several studies have found that an inordinate amount of potential instructional time is lost in the American secondary school classroom. School 1 followed a traditional 50-minute class schedule and school 2, in its first year of block scheduling, higher achieving students used a 90-minute, alternative-days schedule. Two traditional-day schedules and four variations of block scheduling were compared. Other factors of student academic achievement include teacher experience, tests and testing conditions, instructional styles, and school climate. The Twenty-Third Edition of Issues for Debate in American Public Policy promotes in-depth discussion, facilitates further research, and helps.

Six types of traditional and block schedules were studied through the responses of teachers from three inner city, five suburban, and four rural schools. Specifically, the study contrasted the mean scores of students having an RI of 0, 8, and 12 months on a pre-review, post-review, and end-of-course test in precalculus. Both groups indicated that block scheduling provides students with the opportunity for in-depth study of subject matter.
