He had a sister, Jane Douglas, who married a Campbell, but both were very old to have any children. They went to France, and suspiciously, came back with two children, of which at least one was a male.

This caused a great uproar and some claims that Lady Jane and her husband had purchased or even stolen the children in Paris, but a court case eventually concluded that Archibald was indeed Lady Jane's son, so the Douglas inheritance went to him. . As Archibald died without any children, the titles would pass to his supposed nephew, Archibald Douglas.
