Ælfric's Preface to Genesis: A Translation

Councillor What you say is indeed true; but we all prefer to be guests of the ploughman, rather than yours; for the ploughman gives us bread and drink, and what do you give us in your workshop but sparks of iron, and the noise of hammers striking, and bellows blowing? Master Then how do you desire to be wise? It has been suggested that this part of his life was chiefly spent at Winchester; but his writings for the patrons of Cerne, and the fact that he wrote in 998 his Canons as a pastoral letter for , the bishop of , the in which the abbey was situated, afford presumption of continued residence there.
