To Farm or Not to Farm: Gendered Paths to Succession and Inheritance: v. 5 : Schwarz, Ulrike: Amazon.sg: Books

The most important is the father's age, followed by the father's perception of the son's ability, farm size and finally the value that father places on staying in control himself. The cost of long term care can often be high adding to financial concerns around succession and inheritance i.

In increasingly globalized and competitive agricultural markets it is argued that the most productive and efficient farmers should be working in the sector Williams, 2006; Zagata and Sutherland, 2015.

Succession On Farms

With lack of retirement income being mentioned by Riley 2014 as one of many reasons farmers are highly averse to retirement, it is expected that a high number of farmers may opt to defer farm transfer until death. Table 2 lists the main policies and motivations that will affect each scenario. This is connected in turn to the need for a farm to be viable in order to attract and support a new entrant.

Women in farming and the agriculture sector: research report

Crop share leases are fairly uncommon, especially in competitive states. Similarly in Ireland, the Rural Environmental Protection Scheme REPS became very popular with farmers, especially those on lower farm incomes. An age based tax credit is also available in Ireland on reaching age 65.

Your Complete Guide to Farm Succession Planning

But all the news on this front is good. As a result, the successor may not have worked on the farm and may thus lack the managerial experience required to maximise farm income. The question of what motivates decisions to transfer farms is a complex one, and research to date has not apparently enlightened agricultural policy to the extent that current trends towards an ageing farm population are being managed.

Policy drivers of farm succession and inheritance

In fact it was the variation in the relationships, and the effectiveness with which farmers and their children appear to work together which stimulated the interest and motivation for this study.

Grandparents as Guards: A Game

The succession effect implies that farmers with successors are more likely to invest or expand in anticipation of a takeover of the farm by a son or daughter than those who do not have a successor. In the absence of a strong policy incentive, the average age of farmers may continue to rise resulting in a stagnant land market and indeed an agricultural sector that does not meet contemporary demands.

When you meet, start by sharing your goals for the future of the farm or ranch to help your heirs understand how you made your decisions during the farm succession planning process. The value of goods passed on through wills is typically subject to estate taxes. Early retirement from active work is unlikely in the present generation of farmers as this would require a change in basic values, a conclusion similar to that of Anderson and Hepworth 1980.
