Daphne Berdahl, 1964

This project gestures toward an analysis of the operation of a certain kind of power central to contemporary western societies, a power marked by a way of speaking of information as if it existed free of any network of economic or political control, as if it inhabited its own social space. Cabinets in Eastern Europe Petr Kopecky 1:144 Bönker, Frank, Klaus Müller, and Andreas Pickel, eds. From synagogue restoration in Eastern Europe to gay tourism in Prague to the politics of rock music in Hungary, specific, local topics lead the authors to confront difficult questions of individual agency and discursive practices in the move away from socialism.
