Fallacies

For mind or wisdom is the most divine of all goods; and next comes temperance, and justice springs from the union of wisdom and temperance with courage, which is the fourth or last. This was the manner of life which prevailed under Cronos, and which we must strive to follow so far as the principle of immortality still abides in us and we live according to law and the dictates of right reason. This is NOT a retyped or an ocr'd reprint.

Stanhope Earl of Chesterfield Philip Dormer

On receiving this intelligence, these men promptly communicated it to the emperor. This is NOT a retyped or an ocr'd reprint. The old doctrine of the church, which warranted the crusades, and added one of its most precious jewels to the crown of papal prerogative, was that an infidel king had no authority from God to reign, and that he might justly be deposed.
