And all presumptuous sins, Numb. There already existed a royal proclamation enjoining the observance of a day of fasting each month, but the results had been disappointing to Puritans, who strongly believed in the practice, and the new ordinance tried to enforce stricter regulations--all trades and businesses were to close on the day, and clergymen who failed to officiate in fast-day services were to be reported and punished. The ministers intended to defend their orthodox doctrine and to examine Hutchinson's theological errors.

The Services at the Ordination of the Rev. But instead of the momentous change in the government of a great nation absorbing all the faculties of the corporation, it was a secondary consideration ; and they occupied themselves, not in endeavouring to secure the permanency of their government, but in ascertaining the right of Sir William Penn to the freedom of the city.
