Atlantic Salmon Hatchery

Each time a dead egg is detected, a light comes on giving you visual assurance that everything is working correctly. When the adult salmon are ready to return for spawning, they return in mass as a mixed stock fishery.

I have observed for the last few years in the spring at the mouth of the Dillinbaugh, into the Chehalis River, many cormorants roosting in the cottonwood trees downstream of Highway 6 bridge. The substrate also provides hiding spaces where hatched young salmon alevin can remain undisturbed until they have absorbed their yolk material for body development.

The hatchery will take an average of 2,800 eggs from each female Coho salmon. If the floating pressure is heavy you must focus on getting your fly where no fly has gone before. It takes about a month for the eggs to hatch and they then burry themselves down into the rock crevices, where they live on the nutrients of their egg sacs.

Remote Site Incubator

The apertures 46, 60, 94 which surround this area are preferably so narrow as to prevent the escape of the fry therethrough. And he was not sure how long it would take to build the land back up to where it would produce a profitable crop again. As with all steps in the hatchery process, this should be done with great care by trained personnel only.
