Findings: Three major themes for computer applications in the study abroad office emerged: 1 office automation, including word processing and financial spread sheets, 2 database management, and 3 networking or intercommunication. The second largest set of programs, those sending students to Asia, included 83 programs 10. Possible explanations include loosely structured experimental designs, infrequent use of follow-up studies, the lack of an established theoretical base, and perhaps most importantly, the lack of a consensus concerning what to measure.
