IMF Fiscal Monitor: Managing Public Wealth, October 2018

Several interviewees, both in Whitehall and the local public services, talked about the importance of real estate in terms of cost efficiency and regional inclusion over the next decade. They acknowledged recent failures but were clear that companies are improving in their ability to engage in the public services while government and the public services are improving in their ability to engage with companies. Even while frontline staff are told that lack of funding means posts must remain unfilled, and redundancies imposed, the number of managers increases regardless.
