Once the case was in Atlantic County, the court further protected defendant's right to a fair trial through an extensive and open-ended voir dire. Wilkins demonstrated some initial uncertainty when questioned about the potential for bias based on her views of the credibility of law-enforcement agents: Q. Tell the Judge what happened at the front desk.

At defendant's request, the court instructed the jury: Under the law, I'll give you some instructions later in some detail about the applicable law, but one of the principles in the law is that, when a person is being investigated for allegedly having committed a crime, that person does not have a duty to go to or speak to the authorities about it, and you can't draw any inferences of guilt against that person if the person either doesn't go to the authorities or doesn't talk to the authorities.
