Poems of wild life : Roberts, Charles G. D. (Charles George Douglas), Sir, 1860

Pain Ends By Katy A. This long poem by one of the overlooked pioneers of English Romanticism and a poet who led the revival of the sonnet form in English is actually much more than a great nature poem, engaging with early nineteenth-century politics it was published in 1807, the threat of invasion from France, British

For the lies it would often tell you, You will no longer agree.

Nature Poems

As her howl travels, The hunter stops dead still. Impatience and anxiety Give root to errant deed, Which grows to yield but heartache, The fruit that poisons trust, And so to shadow we recede And hope descends to dust. It can also lead us to wonder, did this beautiful earth with all of its natural treasures come about by chance or was it created? Pay attention to the the world she helps us, the audience, see through her words.
