The phantom 'rickshaw and other tales : Kipling, Rudyard, 1865

Curiously enough my face showed no signs of the struggle I had gone through. That day at noon I had occasion to go down the blinding-hot Mall, and I saw a crooked man crawling along the white dust of the roadside, his hat in his hand, quavering dolorously after the fashion of street-singers at Home. First forty-five pages blank; four and a half illegible; fifteen others filled with private memoranda relating chiefly to three persons—a Mrs.
