African

Much of the collective consciousness of black people in mainland North America—the belief of individual men and women that their own fate was linked to that of the group—has long been articulated through a common history, indeed a particular history: centuries of enslavement, freedom in the course of the Civil War, a great promise made amid the political turmoil of Reconstruction and a great promise broken, followed by disfranchisement, segregation and, finally, the long struggle for equality. The Slaughter-House decision by the Supreme Court limited the power of the. With the increasing profitability of slavery and the trade of enslaved peoples, some Africans themselves sold captives to the European traders.
