The railroads lobbied for and got this judgement passed back in the 1800s and corporations have run completely amok since then. By the 1860s, he decided to move into the railroad industry.

The Complicated History of U.S. Relations with China

A sorta like how Red Hat produces something of value that's available for free, and then has the audacity to expect to make money off of it? To keep companies from running rampant and having ultimate power to do as they will without regard. These non-striking workers were often untrained yet had to work in the dangerous conditions of the mines while fending off attacks from union workers. The goal of these laws is to provide an equal playing field for similar businesses that operate in a specific industry while preventing them from gaining too much power over their competition.

Europe Needs to Be Prepared to Jump through a “Biden Window of Opportunity”

In short, the system of making it harder for candidates to raise money virtually ensures that political influence will be cheap to buy. This will with certainty see a Biden administration continue to ask a lot more of Europe in many national security and defense related areas, but again is a task requiring Washington to closely collaboration with its traditional European allies.
