Radical feminists view marriage as a cruel trap for women, perpetuating patriarchy, and keeping women subservient to men. Liberal feminism, a major figure in 19th century liberal feminism, also known under other names such as reformist, mainstream or historically as bourgeois feminism, arose from 19th century first-wave feminism, and was historically linked to 19th century and , while 19th century conservatives tended to oppose feminism as such. Although feminist advocacy is, and has been, mainly focused on women's rights, some feminists argue for the inclusion of within its aims, because they believe that men are also harmed by traditional.
