Researching Housing Associations

Among the many indicators of racial inequality in Britain, housing disparities in particular are very telling.

Books and Reports

It was just one of the BME associations which flourished in the 1980s and 1990s, helped by a decade-long funding programme from government.

News: BME housing associations platform for future black leaders

A recent report has credited black and minority ethnic BME housing associations with moulding a generation of talented black leaders and for fighting discrimination. The damning statistics do not end there. Collectively, the 70 remaining BME housing organisations manage 65,000 homes, with an estimated annual turnover of £600m and controlling assets valued at around £1.

Do we still need BME specific housing associations in Britain?

Below are some key books and reports about housing associations from which blogs are drawn. The beleaguered BME housing sector is — deeply embedded in some of the most deprived areas of the UK and responsive to the needs of these communities in a way that larger organisations might not be.
