They are challenged to go beyond their own personal and familial boundaries. Individuals talked about what they knew, and then one of the group discussed alcohol and crime linked to drunkenness.

The Critical 7 Rules To Understand People

Fern 1982 did a comparative study on focus groups and whilst the data generated did not offer any significant differences, the time factor offered some significant benefits. I think it's about youth and teenage which matters most over here. Living in a globalised world, he suggests, does not create homogeneity and polarisation but rather a creative and eclectic mix of identities.

Chapter Three Data Analysis The chosen method of data collection was focus groups, which generated over five hours of taped discussion on the topic of the dissertation. Are the privileged treated as having something serious to say or simply dismissed as evil, corrupt or greedy without further enquiry'? Lemert 1967 agrees within the body of his labelling theory, that an individual who is subject to being labelled as a result of their behaviour or the judgement of others risks turning a one off event into an on-going and sustained pattern of deviance.
