There have been interventions such as the Keta Sea Defence Project KSDP which involved stabilization of the shoreline with break water and groynes, construction of a flood control structure and land reclamation from the lagoon GLDD, 2001. This partially explains the high erosion rates found in this area.

Japan's energy security predicament post

Further away from the estuary the shortage of sediment supply has led to the removal of sediments from the shoreline to compensate for this loss leading to increased erosion. The total uncertainties were used as weights in the shoreline change calculations. It also confirms the assertion that the Cape has been retreating since the construction of the Akosombo Dam Boateng, 2009.

Quantitative Analysis of Shoreline Change Using Medium Resolution Satellite Imagery in Keta, Ghana

The high poverty levels in most African countries make many aware that it is no longer up to the governments alone to find ways of abetting it, but that other organizations need to join the fight. Contributions by experts in their field are written in German or in English and all have German and English abstracts.
