Very large, rich golden color; tree healthy; one of the very best of clingings; ripens with Late Crawford. Very dull if you're not interested in gardening, but I learned a few things from it. Wickson also explains why you should prune stone fruit in summer, not the winter.

The tree needs air as well as water; it needs a certain free condition of the soil for its best root action. Raspberries are planted about three feet apart in rows, and the rows about six feet apart. Though largely grown, this variety has been largely supplanted by the following sub-varieties, which are seedlings from it.

Golden yellow, very uniform; somewhat flattened; slight color on the sunny side; flesh clear yellow to pit, fine grained, excellent. Fruit very large, yellow, with a dark crimson cheek: rich, sugary, and vinous flavor.
