We need public television to power our democracy

I know he's a slick operator working to sell us on his inadequate long-range economic strategy because the economy won't pick up in time for reelection campaigning.

Virginia State University hosts first televised Democratic governor debate

That set the tone for the hourlong debate.

Television, FDR and the 1940 Presidential Conventions

A source for independent, reliable news coverage and noncommercial programming is available, fortunately, thanks to public television and, in particular, to the Public Broadcasting Corporation that supports and provides news and public affairs coverage, educational programming, and, often enough, entertainment, too. FDR along with two 1940 Democratic Presidential wannabes, Vice President John Nance Garner left, speaking to FDR and Postmaster General James Farley far right , January 8, 1940.

The Effect Of 'In Your Face' Political Television On Democracy

We can speculate about his general disinterest in television.

Television, FDR and the 1940 Presidential Conventions

Television and social ties The third criticism of television is to isolate individuals, destroy social ties.

Television and Democracy: A Philosophical Analysis

In addition, some saw the exchange of political views from a close-up camera angle, whereas others saw the same event from a more distant camera perspective. The quadrennial exercises in party politics have without question evolved over the years. And in our democracy, political will is a renewable resource.

The Effect Of 'In Your Face' Political Television On Democracy

It was streamed on the Democratic website as well as several TV stations across Virginia.
