Other biographers and scholars have left these attribution and prior version theories unmentioned, or explained the atypical characteristics of the composition by indicating it was a very early composition by Bach, probably written during his stay in 1703—1706.

John Gardner: Music for Brass and Organ

It could have been as early as c. Simon Preston has tried to retain the dramatic and virtuosic elements in his own work while, at the same time, seeking to free it from the harmonic restraints of D minor. The composition's third century took it from Bach's most often recorded organ piece to a composition with an unclear origin.
