From pick and shovel to mountaintop removal: environmental injustice in the Appalachian coalfields.

In West Virginia, the West Virginia Organizing Project and Coal River Mountain Watch have made strides in drawing attention to conflicts between coalfield citizens and coal mining operations. .

Harry Caudill: A Man of Courage

This neotropical migrant has probably just returned to its breeding ground. The same day that Mildred Elkins was scrambling to get out of her basement alive, one thunderstorm after another dumped six inches of rain in 14 hours on steep hills and narrow hollows of eastern Kentucky, about 60 miles west. From its inception, the story of SMCRA's administration and enforcement is a tale of top federal and state officials ignoring their duty to protect the coalfield environment and the rights of coalfield citizens from coal operator excesses.

Opinion

However, reports showed strip mining was still creating environmental and health problems. When the blacktop ends, I navigate an old logging road that winds up and around Lost Mountain, ending at its peak.

ARC

Ramboll Environ, the firm that conducted the study, simply asked mining operators how they believed they would be impacted. I decided not to show my wife the article in this morning's paper about a state surface-mine inspector who died after being found beaten and unconscious in his home, his body mutilated by human bite marks. Background Since Donald Trump became president in January 2017, his administration and Congress have canceled, withdrawn, or weakened hundreds of rules enacted to protect workers, communities, and the environment.

I also wonder if the cancer rate and lung-related illnesses are higher in these areas and if so, do we have factual evidence? Stoking the fear of potential massive job losses in already hard-hit areas was an incredibly effective tactic.

ARC

Three of the main components of the program are expanding mobility options, subsidizing rides, and training local addiction treatment providers to be mobility advisors. The disaster killed 125 people and swept away hundreds of homes, bringing attention to the risks to nearby communities of mining.
