Transvaal Miners General Strike 1913

After members of the Federation addressed railway workers in the city of Pretoria, those workers unanimously passed a motion of sympathy with the strikers on the Witwatersrand.

The Golden Age of Mining

What is unique about South African migrant labour is the disallowance on internal migrants from settling at their work places. The period 1930-1940 led to a considerable expansion on the Victoria Falls and Transvaal Power Company.

Historical Papers, Wits University

Where conditions in compounds were the worst, desertion was higher. A photo gallery of refinery operations can be viewed on the Rand Refinery website. .

Transvaal Chamber of Mines Reports, 1912

In doing so the mines constructed a new social category, 'tropical workers' or 'tropicals'. The town was set up on a piece of land that was previously a farm called Randjieslaagte. This was the first line of this voltage in the then British Empire and was the source of considerable troubles for the first few years.
