Such initiatives have borne fruit: today, 92 percent of South African women attend antenatal care, almost 87 percent deliver in health facilities, and South Africa is one of the few African countries where maternity care is free, abortion is legal, and there is a system of confidential inquiries to assess levels, causes of, and contributors to maternal deaths. Several women also experienced or witnessed significant delays after being admitted to health facilities, in some cases with grave consequences.

Book Review

Why the shift in the dominant perception of birth control from a tainted moral issue to a matter of public health policy? As the literary champion of white supremacy and the bestselling author of his day, however, Dixon's novels were not only in the mainstream, they had no small part in shaping the national perception of racial tensions. Another woman stood up and prayed for someone she knew who had been raped.

The U.S. finally has better maternal mortality data. Black mothers still fare the worst.

Nobody respects me because of what they think of us. SPEAK not only focused on union workers but also domestic workers who were in desperate need of better work conditions. Article 19 of the Provincial Health Act deals with complaints procedures, and sets out timeframes for investigations.

Black Women's Maternal Health:

Others told us they did not complain due to lack of trust that their complaints would be investigated and changes made. NDOH, National Health Amendment Act 2011, Government Gazette vol. Accountability can be used to expose problems and identify reforms that will enhance health systems for all.
