XIII The Nineteenth Century: The Victorian Period

Three major ways in which the name and character of the Woodward's store became imbricated in the lives of its employees are illustrative of this familialism: Beacon gossip columns, the social club and social outings, and more formal employee regulations.

Jonathan Pitches

Historical events, whatever else they may be, are events which really happened or are believed really to have happened, but which are no longer directly accessible to perception. A brief note on sources will help introduce the analysis. It is your spirit that will tell you.
