CiteSeerX — Economic Integration in Northeast Asia

Should American power be appeased, engaged, or resisted? The support for multilateralism is a way to signal restraint and commitment to other states, thereby encouraging the acquiescence and cooperation of weaker states. When it acts as a liberal hegemon, it is seeking to lead or manage the global system of rules and institutions; when it is acting as a nationalist great power, it is seeking to advance domestic interests and its relative power position.

Prospects for Regional Cooperation in Northeast Asia

It is also far from certain that all states agree on the precise meaning of regional stability. Bold policy measures can only be taken by the power of a majority, meaning coalition- and consensus-building is all the more necessary. The alliance has played a positive role in relieving the Asian humanitarian disaster, preventing Japanese remilitarization, and keeping the balance of power on the Korean peninsula.

Shifting Definitions of “East Asia” and Regional Cooperation

And Japan has yet to forge a diplomatic relationship with North Korea.

IMAGINING JAPAN IN POST

Several indicators support this view. In late 2015, the Japanese government announced its intention to partake in the negotiations for the comprehensive Trans-Pacific Partnership TPP. What are the costs, incentives, and impulses for pursuing liberal and imperial strategies of governance? The return of Abe Shinzo to leadership in Japan and the accession of Xi Jinping to leadership in China exacerbated these growing differences.
