10 Labor Organizers Some women devoted their lives to the labor movement, becoming involved in some of the most violent labor conflicts of the era. They moved to London, where Davies had a job, at first living in rented accommodation in , then buying and renovating a Victorian house in Boscombe Road, , north London, which remained their main home. In 1921 she became convinced that she needed to associate with a formal body to earn the support of professional societies and the scientific community.
