Hackney Marshes (Greater London)

It must be said that the Olympics and the arrival of Westfield Stratford contributed to and hastened the area's improvement, but some aspects - like the abundant green space and attractive Victorian terraces - were here all along. Many years later and many miles further downstream, a man is walking his cocker spaniel on Hackney marsh. Wanstead was recently voted one of the best places to live in Britain, and it's easy to see why.

Marshland: Dreams and Nightmares on the Edge of London by Gareth E. Rees

Forest Gate is a long-overlooked part of East London with good transport links, excellent green space and schools, and increasingly good local amenities - but the best part is the affordable period housing.

We wheeled it down the road to Lemsford Mill and launched it into the river Lea. However, unless a license is purchased, content cannot be used in any final materials or any publicly available materials.

London Borough of Hackney

Seven Hackney parks have now achieved status. The poor combined footwear makers from Bethnal Green with Hackney's indigenous poor off Homerton's high street and those drawn by low rents to Hackney Wick; while there had been some improvement in behaviour at Homerton, cheap housing was creating 'a dismal but not a rowdy district' near South Mill field at Lower Clapton. If you are familiar the area, you know what he is writing about, but if you aren't you can always head over, and see the novel come to life in front of your eyes.

London Borough of Hackney

The parish was noted throughout the 19th century for its many charitable institutions, either national or connected with London. Therefore, play facilitators have a pivotal role in realising the potential of the Marshes, and increasing its use an appropriation for play activities — however many play agents are constrained by limited resources. .

Hackney: Building after c.1800

Hale End lies just beyond the North Circular, and is in many ways a typical but nice outer London suburb. Hackney lay within the tribal territory. The Downs and other threatened common lands were preserved from 1872 and the marsh from 1893, when other available land in southern Hackney had been rilled.
