Once Upon A Midlife: Classic Stories and Mythic Tales to Illuminate the Middle Years. Anthropologists and What They Do 1965. Along with Benedict, Mead was a major contributor to the development of the school of culture and personality, a subfield of cultural anthropology that sought to understand the role that culture played in shaping the personality of individual members of a particular society.

Moral Education

Stage two is characterized by seeking to pursue one's concrete interests, recognizing that others need to do the same, and a calculating instrumental approach to decision-making. European colonies were mainly run by military and royally-appointed administrators, who when forming policy or enforcing their rule.
