VAN MORRISON

Behind them follows the Lady of the Lake, seen as if through deep water, waiting the time when Arthur shall return to her after the last battle, borne in the black barge, watched by the weeping queens, and Excalibur shall come back into her hands, lost to men forever. May not the still surface of the Well, with its great gouts of bloodstained fungus, have been her magic mirror? Wartime conditions made it difficult for people to assemble in one place, so to those unable to come to their London headquarters, she sent out a weekly letter containing a lesson and the description of a symbol to build on the inner planes.
