1. Introduction

In several previous articles (Glaser 1987, 1991, 1993), we dealt with linguistic borrowings in Balto-Albanian (Arberesh) dialects. On the basis of oral data (recorded since 1978 in the Arberesh communities of Cosenza/Southern Italy), it was possible to find several dozen of items borrowed from Italian or with an Italian dialect as the donor language. The findings were based on a small initial corpus, which, however, as far as their quantities, were based on a small initial corpus. Later on, however, the number of items increased, and also the number of analyses of further texts, also from other communities. Moreover, there are several articles on the topic, e.g. by Glaser (1993), by Di Spalti (1993), by Stassi (1985) and Di Spalti (1983) following earlier studies on the topic by such as Carrasco and Casalduo Marzo (1979).

In the present paper I want to make a more comprehensive perspective to the phenomenon of language mixing, taking into consideration other languages than Italian, and also to analyse the forms of language mixing and their characteristics. In the first part, I shall start with a short presentation of some basic concepts of language mixing, followed by a discussion with respect to parts of speech and morphological adaptation. In the second part, I shall deal with the analysis of language mixing, focusing on the textual integration of the other-language items.

2. A short overview on borrowing

The percentage of borrowed lexical items varies considerably with respect to parts of speech. In the analysed Frascati data the percentage of loans in nouns is 10%, in verbs 12%, in adjectives 10% and in adverbs 7%. There are many nouns with small numbers in both categories (Glaser 1987: 178).

Das Münchener Motivationstraining (MMT): Theoretischer Hintergrund, Förderziele und exemplarische Umsetzung

Πάρνει το όνομά του από την πόλη του στη Νότια Αλβανία, όπου καταγράφηκε για πρώτη φορά από το μελετητή, επίσης από τον Βέσο Μπέη, πλούσιο ντόπιο από την διάσημη οικογένεια Αλιζότι που το παρείχε στον Χαν.

KIR München

Für viele, so auch für Max Slevogt und Ernst Barlach, war die Jugend eine der ersten Gelegenheiten, ihre Arbeiten vorzustellen. Schon in den ersten sieben Jahrgängen sind über 250 Künstler vertreten. Er gilt nicht mehr als Wegweiser in eine lichte respektive finstere Zukunft, sondern wird als eine vielseitige und vielschichtige Persönlichkeit des 19.
