Mississippi: the closed society (1966 edition)

I am thinking of men like Harry Ash-more, Thomas D. In the summer of 1962, at a citizens' meeting on a court order to desegregate public facilities, he found himself rising from his seat, to answer a foul-mouthed segregationist. The strategy of their books is simply to relate how events acted upon them, and to suggest that, under similar circumstances, no one could have responded much differently—and still remain a decent man.
