The Kingdom of Mutapa Where? The bahima herded Kabaka's herds. Our writers travel all over this captivating continent to bring back the best travel stories, advice and guides. The stone buildings were constructed with local granite, and the stones were stacked without mortar.

The Cambridge History of Africa

The Sahelian and Saharan towns of the Mali Empire were organized as both staging posts in the long-distance caravan trade and trading centers for the various West African products. They taxed gold when it was initially brought from the forested regions in the south to their market towns and again right as the Berber traders departed for the north. Movies, television shows, and other media often show us an Africa that is rural, a landscape dominated by wild animals, and a continent isolated from the rest of the modern world.
