Chapter 2 – Labour History

Chapter Objectives

By the end of this chapter, you will be able to discuss:

- the relationship between work environment and the movement toward unionized relationships;
- the relationship between the Canadian and American labour movements;
- how evolution, paradigm, business unions, and political representation have shaped the labour movement;
- how specific events from the 1800s to present day have shaped the history of labour;
- how current and past history may shape the future of labour in Canada.

Chapter Summary

Chapter 2 provides an overview of industrial relations in Canada. The chapter starts with pre-protectionist master-servant relationships before the introduction of progressive workers' legislation. It then moves through the period of industrialization, where the focus of the chapter is placed on the founding principles of the AFL, how they have both united and divided the labour movement, as well as the relationships between the Canadian and American labour movements.

Several of the chapter elements can be delivered in three components:

- Lesson plan: A detailed outline of the chapter, including the main concepts, learning objectives, and key terms.
- Class exercise/extension: To make history come to life, students can be asked to think of ways to extend their learning by applying concepts to their own communities or individually.
- Test and practice cases and exercises: These cases and exercises can be utilized for a number of purposes: (1) to test students' learning at the end of the chapter, (2) for in-class or out-of-class assignments, and (3) for examination and testing purposes.
