The project of feminist theology did not deal with the categories of race and economics in the development of its theological discourse. She states that in liberation theology many times racism is rejected but sexism is embraced, and where classism is questioned, racism and sexism are tolerated, and where sexism is repudiated, racism and classism are often ignored.

She argues that feministas Hispanas have continually been marginalized by Anglo feminist struggles and theories. Double Jeopardy: To Be Black and Female — Frances Beale: Frances Beale speaks from the standpoint of the black woman being the victim of double jeopardy. There is no great exchange.

Feminist Theology from the Third World: A Reader

One issue I might point out is that the translation of this work does leave much to be desired. The histories of poor and working class black women arise out of specific contextual locations.
