In Urdu it contains poems of writers not known as mystics, such as Ghālib, Jigar and Mīr. The hadith often used in supporting the empathetic ecstasy is the injunction of the Prophet that the believers should weep or at least try to weep, when they recite the Qur'an. The basis of this division is whether harmony or melody predominates.

Poems in which the phantom or dream picture visits the poet abound in Persian and Urdu literature. The first one lists the epithets by which the saint is usually known: The Prince, the Holder of Hand, the Greatest Help, the Divine Pole The Beloved, Prince of the World, what a Divine Beloved! ALLAH is the Most Great.

For this reason, I have complemented the literary sources with interviews I made during a period of fieldwork in Delhi and Ajmer during the winter 2006-7. All the other notes depend on the tonic. For Kāmil it is not only his own religion and doctrine that were destroyed, but the entire universe was looted by one glance of the beloved.
